

Doing More with Less

Overview

The request to 'Do more with less' echoes throughout most public and private sector organisations these days. The need to find efficiencies and saving dividends means that we need to explore new ways of conducting our business from work processes through to resource allocation. The workshop will present a series of 'counterpoints' to challenge the accepted thinking across a range of workplace issues from leadership, to staff training and even how we recruit and employ staff. The aim of this workshop will be to explore a range of alternate paradigms and in the process, polish our skills in innovation and creativity. At the conclusion of the workshop participants will have considered a number of different approaches to conducting their work and managing their workplace as well as learned a range of tools to be constructive heretics within their organisation.

Content

Topics to be covered include:

- The role of manager as a trainer.
- Organic systems vs formal structures.
- Getting the most out of middle management.
- Understanding the value of stability.
- Doing less to achieve more.

Outcomes

Participants have the opportunity to:

- Explore different structures to enhance performance.
- Challenge accepted thinking to see work and associated methods differently.
- Recognise the value of targeted training to enhance performance

Who should attend?

Workers and managers at all levels who are being asked to do more with less but a running out of options to do so.

Benefits to you and your organisation

Those attending the workshop will walk away with a clearer understanding of their workplace and how to harness savings and productivity opportunities. If you apply the techniques covered you and your agency will be able to do more with less...perhaps even do less for more.
